CANTERBURY, B.C., THURSDAY, DEC. 12, 1901.

There is too much joshing in these latter days with regards to married life. There are a few men running newspapers in this Province who delight in making light of it. Were these bachelor editors good enough to command the esteem of a pure woman their tune would soon undergo a great change.

The mail service in North East Kootenay is languid, and we must say the same of the people if they allow the present system to continue.

We should have two mails every week from Golden, our business interests demands it.

We should have the Fort Steele stage run through to Atholmer and Peterboro in order to derive proper benefit.

Everything points to a busy season next spring, and it behoves every citizen in the Columbia Valley to prepare accordingly. Enquiries of our resources are coming from far and near. Several mining deals are being considered and we can count on a good steady growth. The continuous development of our best mines is having good effect on many mining men who have been waiting to see the results of development in this district.

In a few short years the Upper Columbia Valley will be better known as the "Garden Valley." Every year the ranchers are proving that it is more profitable to grow vegetables than grain. And as fruit has been grown with splendid results more people will try it. In fact the fertile soil of this valley will produce fortunes in the next few years. There is still plenty of uncultivated land to be had and we will extend the hand of friendship to the stranger that may come.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost in a recent sermon in New York is reported to have got after Mr. Carnegie's foolish sayings and John D. Rockefeller for some of his utterances at Bible class meetings. Referring to Carnegie's saying that "it would be unfortunate for the world if 999 out of every 1000 were not born poor," the doctor declared that the only people who extol the blessings of the poor are the rich.

Continuing Dr. Pentecost said: "Carnegie said he would rather give up all his riches than be deprived of Shakespeare or Wagner in his life, and John D. Rockefeller, jr., emphasized the same idea and at the same time said he did not believe Christ meant it was harder for a rich man to enter heaven than a poor man."

"I fear the gentlemen who made such statements do not recognize their humbug. I sincerely doubt if Rockefeller would sacrifice his riches rather than give up his Bible class, as he says. If the doctrine Christ taught is true, young Rockefeller is doomed to the everlasting punishment of hades. If Carnegie were to lose his fortune I have no doubt he would begin accumulating a second, rather than bother about Shakespeare or Wagner. I regard Carnegie as a humbug, and all the libraries he will ever build will not blot from my memory the scenes of Homestead."

Mr. Pentecost evidently is a gentleman who is not afraid to speak out his convictions and if he continues to express his opinions he will either rise to greater fame than Carnegie or Rockefeller or be stoned off the New York town-site. He is a man to be admired.

In discussing the question of sympathy for the Boers the Tacoma Ledger strikes a clute of truth when it says that according to all acknowledged rules of war they were defeated months ago, but that they have chosen to disregard the rules. The Ledger's remarks are worthy of quotation in that not a few American contemporaries persist in howling about the injustice of the campaign, forgetting that they had trouble of their own not long ago. Continuing the Ledger says:

"There is to be a pro-Boer meeting in Chicago. It will represent a waste of breath. The doom of the Boers has been written. For them to surrender would be the part of patriotism and common sense, for their case is hopeless. They have been left the choice of surrender or the grave. If they elect to die in the field there is no human agency can stop them. They may accentuate the reputation they already have for foolhardy courage."

"England is one of the great powers of the world. It went into the contest without invitation, and, being in, cannot retreat. On the other hand, as often stated, the Boers could surrender with honor, and, having surrendered, they would know a measure of freedom such as they have never experienced. They are not fighting for liberty; they are fighting for the perpetuation of an oligarchy as petty and tyrannical as ever oppressed a people. They had their chance, and they threw it away. There came to them an opportunity, and they were blind to it. Instead of becoming a part of civilization, they chose to clog the path of civilization, and they must be swept aside. The movement is as certain as any other phase of civilization. To feel pity for them is natural and inevitable. To recognize the certainty of their fate is just as natural. Their valor has become folly. Their prate of liberty was folly from the first. They know nothing of liberty, having withheld it whenever it was in their power to do so."

ARIZONY RAY.

The wildest cowboy on the range was that same Arizony Ray, Neck deep in every devilment that come adriftin' 'round his way

As quick as a lightnin' with the gun, an' mighty handy with the rope, An' ridin' hours he never had no equal on the western slope.

An independent sort of cuss, but true as steel to all his pals,

'Bout half-way likin' an' half-way feared by all the party rancoler gals, An' when he'd flood his inner works with catus brier booze we found

'Twas safer to keep out o' reach o' tha o' gun he packed around.

His daily work o' punchin' cows the kid was never known to shirk,

He followed Injuns with a vim that showed he sort o' liked the work, An' when we'd overtake the reds and bump again a nasty fight

That same young Arizony Ray'd seem a-shinin' with delight.

His cup o' joy was allus full when he was shootin' up a town,

An' smethin' allus overtook the man that tried to call him down;

Was damped in jail a hundred times, but managed to get out again

With just the same affection for the trail o' devilment an' sin.

One day a letter come to him, an' with it came a photograph,

An' as he read the letter through us chaps that knowed him had to laugh,

To see him cry but changed our tune when with his head at humble peice:

He handed us the pictur card an' said,
"That's my ol' mother, luv."

Then come a new surprisin' change.
Perhaps a dozen times a day

He read that letter through an' through in eager, lookin' sort o' way,

An' when he'd go to bunk at night it seemed to us new's queer old

To see him down upon his knees a tryin' to make up with God.

"Don't know whether it is new or not. I heard it down at Johnston," said the man who recently returned from that place. "There is a rich widow living just outside the town; he confessed, and after several elderly gentlemen had vainly endeavored to win her into matrimony again a report gained circulation that she was a regular man-hater."

"Finally, a wealthy widower, carrying with him the evidences of good living and heartiness that rock congenial companionship visited the town and was soon after a caller on the intractable widow. After he thought sufficient advancement had been made to justify a proposal, he proceeded to feel his way.

"Beautiful home you have here."

"Yes, I enjoy it."

"Fine outlook, fine trees, fine siting. But there is one thing lacking."

"Yes?"

"It is an Adamless Eden, don't you know. You are so good in everything else that I should think you would be glad to share these blessings with a husband."

"Are you proposing, sir?"

"In a tentative way. If you can be convinced that you should have a husband, I should like to be the man."

"Husband? I have a gardener who smokes and drinks, I have a parrot that scares like a pirate and I have a cat that stays out all night. What in the world do I want with a husband?"

Really made advice very seldom fits.
A wise girl never marries her ideal.
Man is as positive as a woman is contrary.

Love may be blind, but it has a delicate touch.

A fable is a steam-winding lie with a moral attachment.

Many a man looks insignificant when his wife is with him.

This secret of ignorance is not to know your lack of wisdom.

The politeness of a mean man is always more or less disagreeable.

Fortunate is the man who can depend upon himself at all times.

A woman is never satisfied until she can do a thing two different ways.

Some men get rich while others are waiting for great opportunities.

The Telegraph Line

Instruments Have Arrived-Operator Now En Route-Really Looks as Though Business is Intended

Mr. R. A. Kington was in Canterbury yesterday and to our reporter stated that the instruments for the Winderemere-Golden telegraph line arrived in Golden and that Mr. Dunn had already installed them at Golden. Further, that Mr. Dunn was now on the road to Winderemere, but was repairing the wire as he came along.

It really looks now as though the wire would be useful yet. This is getting very close to the real thing and we believe we may now venture to congratulate Mr. Goldberger on having secured his much needed advance towards civilization. With a few more such improvements even the Outcrops may be forced to become civilized.

THE HONEST WORKINGMAN

As through the world we take our way
How oftentimes we hear The praises sung of high-born-men,
Of princes, and dukes, and peers;
The papers tell us of their fame;
They're lauded through the land,
But they very seldom hear a word About the workingman.

They praise the wealthy capitalist,
The purse-proud millionaire,
Their pockets have gold-bulging And they're praised from every where, Let others sing the praises
Of those who rule in the land,
But mine shall be a nobler theme—
The honest workingman.

Oh! kings may prize their glittering crowns

And all their royal host,
And lordlings brag of their blue blood;
It's all they have to boast; But why is all their rank compared With our hero, true and grand,
One of fair nature's noblemen—
The honest workingman.

His hands may be both rough and hard,
His clothes are and speech be plain,
But you will find his honest heart Without a blot or stain.

And there are some whose clothes are fine,
Whose hands are soft and white,
But the sweet records of their lives Could never stand the light.

May Heaven's truest blessings fall Upon that hero's head,
Who bravely toils from morn till night
To earn his bread and his food, Each has no more who can show A sweet heart so grand;
No blows great ladies' terms-born knight
The honest workingman.

No box of Ferraris' favored ones Honest only for low he seek,
And more he prizes of the man Who toils the daily bread,
And whose hardy hand of toil
Who labors through the land, Earth has no king more great than he—
The honest workingman.

Fish Supply Inexhaustible.

Northeast County In Great Britain Prof. William C. McIndoe, the leading British marine biologist, has strongly supported the view that the resources of the sea are practically inexhaustible and in Norway Dr.
Hjort and Dr. Bjell have shown the true hope of the country as regards our sea-food supply. Dr. Hjort's discovery shows that there are many million times more young fish in the sea than man had any idea of, and in theory that the young blood carries out to sea period is proved to be a fact. He made the further remarkable discovery that away out in the open sea, where it was several thousand of meters in depth, he found fish as it were in layers or even strata. Some require a line as long as the monument to reach down to them, others were in still lower depths which would not be reached by the monument on top, and still many thousands feet of water below them. There, in these still and dark and farthest regions, fishes of all kinds and sizes, in great numbers, are found. Not of least significance is the finding of cod in the deep places of the sea, as in this discovery we have the key to solve the mystery as to where the cod comes when he hauls from the coasts.

It was formerly supposed that the gilling of a cod in two months the destruction of more than 2,000,000 potential codfish. Now, as Dr. Bjell says it nearly looks like improving the life-chances of the progeny of another cod.
Formerly it was considered that the fish population of the sea was a fixed quantity, which was being continually decreased by man's hands on it. Now it should appear to be an organism on which the attacks of man can make no real impression. It seems probable, indeed, that in every second, every minute, and every day, more fish is produced in the sea than all humanity combined could devour in the same time.

The F. L. S. hopes the Outcrops will be satisfied with the telegraph line as it states the operator was a hawkeye, with the instruments. Yes, for the present, but the moment needs more than
